

Protecting the Health of Large Women (Womens Health in the 21st Century Book 7)

The Diseases Associated with Obesity
Obesity is a risk factor for a great number of serious conditions and diseases. Obese women are at higher risk for all the following: 1) Arthritis 2) Cancers 3) Cerebrovascular accident (stroke) 4) Diabetes and the associated conditions, including a) Amputation of limbs, especially the feet b) Blindness c) Heart disease a recent study suggests that women with diabetes have more than a 40% greater risk of coronary heart disease as men. d) Kidney failure, resulting in the need for lifelong dialysis e) Neuropathy (chronic nerve pain, especially in the feet) 5) High cholesterol 6) High blood pressure 7) Pregnancy-related conditions and diseases of pregnancy Safely protecting obese women from the conditions and diseases of pregnancy As we saw in Volume 2 with the title Diseases of Pregnancy: - There are a number of conditions and diseases of pregnancy that can severely disable or even kill women - Some of those conditions and diseases of pregnancy are more common, or more severe, among obese women; therefore, - Obese women, like other women, if they do not intend to become pregnant, must use an effective form of contraception both consistently and correctly However, in Volume 1 with the title Protect Your Health with The Pill we briefly discussed that, for obese women, some methods of contraception may be better choices than others may be in terms of both effectiveness and safety, especially safety. The purpose of the present book is to go into more detail with regard to the a) effectiveness b) advantages and c) disadvantages of the various methods for specifically those women whose BMI of greater than 30 is due to excessive body fat

Here is a list of the many conditions and diseases that are less common in both obese and other women who choose to take The Pill for at least 10 years during their lifetimes: Pregnancy-Related --Abortion,
