D. 451. every respect. He desired a title expressive of the universality of his acknowledged headship over ecclesiastical affairs in the Kingdom of Babylon. But the Patriarch of Constantinople, scarcely less arrogant and ambitious than himself, in a council held at that city in 588, assumed the title of Universal Bishop, which was confirmed to him by the council. This aroused the indignation of the contemporary bishop of Rome, with whom it was a principle to endure no ecclesiastical superior in the Little Horn dominion. He styled it, an execrable, profane, and diabolical procedure. In 590, Gregory I, usually termed the Great by ecclesiastics, was the representative of the strange-god power. He wrote a letter to Maurice, who occupied the Dragon-throne, in which he styles the title o blasphemous name by which all honor is taken from all other priests, while it is foolishly arrogated by one. He says, it was offered to the Bishops of Rome by the Council of Chalcedon, but refused; why, then says he, should we refuse this title when it was offered, and another assume it without any offer at all V He calls upon Maurice to humble and chastise the presumptuous patriarch, who, by taking upon himself the title, would elevate himself above the emperor. The letter, however, does not appear to have produced any effect; for the pompous title continued to be borne by the patriarchs of Constaninople. One of these whose name was Cynacus in a letter to Gregory subscribed himself Universal Bishop. Gregory was greatly displeased, and in consequence treated the ...
